Bushkin's Last.

John Bushkin has written the following to the editor of the Pull Mall Gazette: Toward the close of the excellent article on the Taylor trial in your issue for October 31st, you say that the people never will be, nor ought to be, persuaded "to treat criminals simply as vermin which destroy, and not as men who ought to be punished." Certainly not, sir! Who ever talked, or thought, of regarding criminals "simply" as anything (or innocent people, either, if there be any)? But regarding criminals complexly and accurately, they are partly men, partly vermin; what is human in them you must punish—what is vermicular, abolish. Anything—if you can find it—I wish you joy of, and hope you may be able to preserve it to society. Insane persons, horses, dogs or cats become vermin when they become dangerous. I am sorry for darling Fido, but there is no question about what is to be done with him. Yet, I assure you, sir, insanity is a tender point, with me. One of my best friends has just gone mad; and all the rest say I am mad myself. But, if ever I murder anybody—and, indeed, there are numbers of the people I should like to murder—I won't say that I ought to be hanged; for I think nobody but a bishop or bank director can ever be a rogue enough to deserve hanging; but I particularly, and with all that is left of what I imagine to be sound mind, request that I may be immediately shot.

The Streets of Paris.

The cleaning of the streets of Paris costs the municipality over eight hundred thousand dollars per annum. There are 121,625,584 square feet to be swept every day, of which 23,896,745 square feet are cleaned at the cost of the municipality, 59,448,933 square feet by the property owners at their own cost, and 38,480,906 square feet by the municipality for the property owners. The average annual cost of cleaning is five mills per square foot. The sweepers are classed in two divisions. The first division working all day, is composed of forty-one brigades, each consisting of a chief and thirty sweepers. The second division, working half a day, is composed of seventy brigades, each consisting of a chief and twelve sweepers. There are 931 regular sweepers constant at work, and 2,630 hands are temporarily employed, of whom 910 are men and 1,720 women. The day's work commences at three in the morning in summer, and four in winter, and ends at four o'clock in the afternoon. The half-day's work ends at ten in the morning. The pay is about forty-eight cents a day.
